Assistant Property Manager

Transitioning from the USMC to a civilian career at Riverstone has been an incredibly rewarding journey. The discipline, professionalism, and leadership skills I built during my time in the Marine Corps didn't stay behind when I took off the uniform, they became the exact foundation for everything I do here. Leading teams through tough challenges, managing complex problems, and executing missions effectively are skills that translate perfectly to my day to day role supporting our communities.

What I love most is how my sense of purpose has evolved. I went from serving my country and leading Marines to directly serving residents in need, and it's a perfect fit with Riverstone's mission to genuinely improve lives. It's incredibly fulfilling to take that Marine Corps drive and focus it into a role where I get to lead, support, and make a real, positive difference for people every single day.

My military experience has taught me discipline, problem-solving, and teamwork skills that directly translate to my work at Riverstone Communities. It allows me to handle daily challenges with a focus on efficiency and high-quality service.

After 10 years in the Navy I transitioned back into civilian life back in 2000. I started in the apartment industry in 2005. After years of moving around, I ended up back in my hometown in Northern Wisconsin and found Riverstone Communities. I started in September 2019 and couldn't be happier. After the interview process, I was offered the job and gladly accepted it after taking a two-year break from property management. This is my first manager role at a mobile home community, and I have been absolutely overwhelmed with the support and training I was given from day one.

I love working for Riverstone, and they always take care of their team members and residents. They are not your average property management company by any means. There is definitely room to grow and advancement opportunities with Riverstone. Veterans are very welcome here, and I encourage you to apply and become part of the Riverstone family. You won't regret it!

My transition from military to civilian life was not easy. I was accustomed to a structured environment of receiving orders, punctuality, and formal military protocol. When I retired from the U.S. Navy in 2007, I initially felt out of place and struggled to adjust to the different pace of civilian roles.

After moving to Florida and eventually joining Riverstone, I finally found a professional environment that resonated with my background. Working here reminds me of my military service in the best ways: there is a clear chain of command, an emphasis on punctuality and safety, effective communication, and a strong culture of teamwork and mutual respect. Although I still miss certain aspects of my time in the service, I feel right at home with the team here at Riverstone.

What I missed most after leaving active duty was the sense of structure and being part of a team working toward a clear mission. I found both at Riverstone. The transition back into the civilian workforce was one less stressor for me because Riverstone Communities truly understands the value a veteran brings. The mechanical skills, problem-solving, and sense of urgency I learned in the military directly apply to keeping our communities running smoothly. The onboarding process is excellent, especially having a dedicated trainer and a structured 1:1 'Training Passport'. It meant I was never left guessing.

If you're looking for a company that respects your service and gives you the autonomy to drive your own career growth, Riverstone is it.

We also support our active military team members!

I currently serve in the U.S. Army Reserve as a Sergeant (E-5) and a 15U CH-47 Chinook Helicopter Repairer. My responsibilities include inspecting, troubleshooting, repairing, and maintaining aircraft systems, including engines, transmissions, rotor systems, flight controls, hydraulic systems, and electrical components. I also supervise and mentor junior Soldiers while ensuring all maintenance is completed in accordance with Army aviation safety standards.

I have served in the military for over seven years and have had the opportunity to deploy in support of Operation Inherent Resolve (OIR) in Iraq and Kuwait. Throughout my military career, Riverstone has consistently supported my service obligations, whether for monthly drill weekends, annual training, military schools, or extended military assignments.

From day one, Riverstone has worked with me to maintain a healthy balance between my military and civilian careers. The support of the HR team and regional leadership has allowed me to continue serving my country while also growing professionally within the company. Their flexibility and understanding have played a significant role in my success in both careers.
